On the one hand, you want a light formula that will not strip natural oils from already fragile hair. On the other hand, you also want a substantial conditioning treatment to fill moisture without leaving your hair looking for dish. The best co-washing for fine hair can achieve both objectives by combining delicate and sulphate-free detergents with ingredients that leave the hair soft, moisturized and full of volume. While "co-washing" is another way to refer to a method called "only washing conditioner" — as in jumping the shampoo and going straight to the second step — does not mean that any old conditioner will be right for work. What makes a co-wash stand out is its ability to still clean the hair without the use of hard detergents or sulfates that can strip the hair of moisture. However, without sulphate typically means lather free (or low lather), so do not be surprised if the cleaning conditioner does not get as sweaty as massaging it in the hair.
