Brown/Getty Images In the air since 1956, The Price Is Right has proven to be one of America's favourites — and more lasting — game shows. The games are fun and easy to play, and the competitors could be your grandmother or the guy next door. And what better than watching Drew Carey crack jokes while sipping the morning coffee? Of course, any successful television show has its fair share of secret producers do not want the audience to know. We found out a few rare facts about "The price is right that I probably never knew as a viewer at home." Price Is Right debuted in 1956 on NBC and was successful untilOver a 10-year streak, the show aired more than 11,000 episodes - more episodes of Jeopardy! and Wheel of Fortune in the same amount of time. Photo courtesy: Photo Archive/Getty Images The show moved to ABC towards the end of the first decade before finding a permanent home on CBS. Without shortage of competitors, it seems that the price is right is not near the end of its life. That's a good thing, what, Always mark "Fun!" When you listen to Arew Carey Scream, "Come down!" Bob Barker replaced originals The price is the right host Bill Cullen when the show moved to CBS in 1972, and the audience loved him. In 1987, after being on vacation and letting him the gray roots take over, he decided to stop coloring his hair for the show. He had gotten a lot of compliments on his natural shadow of gray. Photo of courtesy: Management of Jesse / Wire Image / Getty Images NBC gave it the OK to embrace its white locks and barker apparently transformed into a "silver fox" during the night. In fact, a spectator said he "must have had a night's hell!" It is interesting to note that the evaluations went after his hair went natural. A lot of spectators watching the show don't realize that everything that a competitor wins the price is right is subject to taxation. Of course, they still get money or objects that they didn't have, but the amount it keeps is never as high as the amount declared in the show. Photo of courtesy: Federico M. Brown / Getty Images The state of California sees all the prizes as a taxable income, so the competitors must pay taxes on the products based on the retail price of anything winning. Apparently, some winners have refused entire prizes just to avoid dealing with it. A man refused $ 10,000 because he didn't want to give up half to his former wife. One of the iconic lines of Bob Barker of the show comes as the roll of credits: "Remember to do what your pets stowed á €
